

Statement in Opposition to State Control of Abortion

Abortion should not be subject in any way to government control. Government control of abortion says that one's offspring belong in part to the state. One's children or potential children are not state property!

Abortion costs no one but the woman who undergoes it. It does not cost anyone else. We may actually benefit from the elimination of the aborter's progeny from the gene pool. If it imposes no cost on others, it is not a crime.

Abortion is best considered a form of suicide, the killing of one's immortality. That fact in itself, bolstered by religious teachings, is enough to minimize its occurrence. But, much like the illegalization of addictive drugs, making abortion illegal takes the attention off the damage it does to the perpetrator. Like drugs, abortion is poison, but it is made more attractive when people are constrained by ridiculous victimless crime laws rather than by recognition of its poisonous nature.
