

Water Resources

Jason King, P.E., State Engineer and Administrator, joined the Nevada Division of Water Resources as a hydraulic engineer in 1991. Since that time, he has worked as Chief of the Engineering and Dam Safety Section, Chief of the Water Rights Section, Deputy State Engineer, and was Acting State Engineer before being appointed as Nevada State Engineer in April 2010. The State Engineer's Office is responsible for the appropriation, adjudication, and regulation of all waters within the State, and has oversight of water well drilling activities, dam safety, water planning, and floodplain management. Mr. King has negotiated on Nevada's behalf on numerous interstate water disputes, is a member of the State Environmental Commission, the Colorado River Basin Salinity Control Advisory Council, and served on Governor Sandoval's Drought Forum. He earned his civil engineering degree from the University of New Mexico and is a registered professional engineer.
