MESSAGE TO THE LEGISLATURE OF NEVADA SEVENTY-NINTH SESSION, 2017

Mr. Speaker, Mr. President pro Tem, Governor, cabinet officials, Mr. Chief Justice and your colleagues, members of the Nevada Legislature, thank you very much for the opportunity to come kick off the federal address season. You may know that back in the day, I was not a big fan of this particular thing when I was a member. I used to sit over in that part of the room, and when whoever it was—and I was very bipartisan about it—would come in this door, I would exit through the back door there. To let you know that I have not completely forgotten about that, I intend to be, as were some of the judges that I practiced in front of in my earlier days, crisp and not take up much of your beautiful spring evening. So hang on, here we go.

I want to talk about just two things and then the third part involves this bag, but I will be crisp nonetheless. The first one is a pretty complex topic: What are you going to do? The second one is a tribute to Harry Reid. What are your questions?

What are you going to do? As the person given the responsibility of representing Nevada's original congressional district, I can tell you there is not much going on in D.C. right now. Everybody loves everybody, there are no issues which are contentious, the Executive Branch is getting along well with the Legislative Branch, and of course the Supreme Court is having a great time with things looking like four-four and somebody is set to do whatever. Nonetheless, when you say What are you going to do, let us talk about the most smooth topic of What are you going to do, especially in view of today, and that is the subject of health care.

Do not worry; nobody's eyes need to roll back in their head. As a person who has spent almost 20 years, his entire political life, in the Legislative Branch, I can tell you that I am a process guy. It does not mean that you always get things the way you want it. It does not mean people always testify at those meetings in accordance with what you may think your thoughts are. I am an absolute true, complete believer in the legislative process, as I originally learned it in this building, and the damndest things happen when you have a hearing with witnesses. And so as we march down this health care road—no disrespect to anybody on either side of the aisle or my colleagues back in the swamp—I will tell you that when there are references to regular order which talk about a markup, I think that is an opportunity for everybody to practice their partisan floor speeches. The problem is, there are not any witnesses—you know, folks who are sometimes considered shareholders, people who have views, whether they are with yours or against yours. As some of you may already know, it is incredibly frustrating, as one of the folks with one of those 435 votes on the south end of the building. Interestingly enough, the south end of the building is the House of Representatives in D.C., and here we are at the south end of the building in the Assembly where I started my go-around. I will try to avoid those references to the north end of the building here that I often refer to back there because sometimes they are less than flattering, but they are, in fact, bipartisan since we still have a bipartisan delegation there.

Let me just say this: We will continue, during this health care debate, to study the issues, to do things like say How will it affect Nevada. I understand how the budget is affected by Medicaid. So one of the basic questions we have for all of those people back there practicing those floor speeches is how much Nevada gets for Medicaid now and how much it would get under your proposal. That is a good place to start because, quite frankly, we do not have the luxury—or the curse, depending on what your view is—of not having a balanced budget in this state. So when you talk about how that works, when you talk about the effect on Nevada when you have an access problem—we have access problems in southern Nevada, much less the Truckee Meadows and rural Nevada—you need to know those sorts of facts.

Therefore, when you ask What is this going to do to improve access, remember this started out seven years ago, as we need reform. Another question that comes up is, How is this going to reduce costs. Because if it is not, what about pharma? What about insurance company regulations? What about all those things? Not all of them can be done in reconciliation. The challenge, as you folks well know, is you have to keep your head on a swivel and you have to look at that stuff. So it is very much a jury that is out, if you will, in terms of what is going on. Ultimately, my vote will be based on the impact on Nevada. What does our budget do with this? Is it the right thing to do?

I will end the health care discussion with this: I remember seven years ago, Nancy Pelosi came under some criticism for passing the Affordable Care Act at two o'clock in the morning. Bad things were said. Just as an observer, here is a casual observation. If that was a real bad thing to do seven years ago, you probably should not have run the committee all night long and voted at o-dark-thirty in the morning, past two o'clock this time. Quite frankly, right now it looks as if Nancy Pelosi was more efficient—maybe not right, but much more efficient with her people's time. Not a great start.

Let me go to topic number two. It may come as a surprise to some people in this room that Amodei wants to say thank you to Senator Harry Reid. I do. Do you know why? Lately there have been some people that have got some minor concerns—some of them might even be within a hundred or two hundred feet of where I stand now—about public lands. I think it is worth having a little lesson about our history in public lands for a minute, before we get to the best part. Once again, let us take a look at the facts and see what makes sense. Here is some food for thought: The single most successful piece of public lands legislation in the history of the nation is the Southern Nevada Public Lands Management Act, a piece of legislation that was bipartisan and is about 20 years old. It has done what for the folks in Clark County—not just Clark County, though? It has given people in places like the Clark County Commission, the Las Vegas City Council, the North Las Vegas City Council, the Henderson City Council, and the Boulder City Council the ability to have local control over if, when, and how they grow, by a process which is completely transparent and sells at public auction federal land surrounding the most vibrant commercial area in our state, directly to developers. What do we do with those proceeds? You folks know the list. There is an education component, there is a natural resources component, and some of it goes back to the federal government. Quite frankly, it was a visionary piece of legislation that is still working well. It even dealt with endangered species issues on the desert tortoise. So there it is.

In the five and a half years that I have had the responsibility of representing the state, and specifically this part of the state, we have passed a couple of more bills. I want to make it real clear: They would not have passed without Harry Reid's support. The Nevada Native Nations Land Act transferred 60,000 to 70,000 acres, and the McDermitt tribe up in northern Nevada that had checkerboard throughout its Indian reservation received about 19,000 of those acres. As those in the judicial business know, if you are chasing a suspect and you are on tribal land, then you are on federal land, then you are on tribal land, it makes jurisdictional issues kind of tough.

I have to tell you about the speed at which public lands legislation moves. When I went up to meet with them originally, they said We need a little help on this lands thing. We have this checkerboard and we would like to get that. I said We do not keep the gate. If you have a county commission resolution or something from your tribal council or whatever, we will introduce it and we will see how it goes. They said We had a bill. Really? Have you got a copy of it? Yes, we do. So somebody went back into the tribal offices and came back out with a Senate bill that was introduced in 1972 by Alan Bible and Howard Cannon on behalf of the McDermitt tribe. They get the patience award. Nonetheless, finally we got that done.

The other one is the Northern Nevada Land Conservation and Economic Development Act, a bill that created 75,000 acres of wilderness. It never would have happened without United States Senator Harry Reid. We had some problems. It was a Lyon County-centric thing. For five years, there were some folks up in Humboldt County fighting for the Pine Forest Range Wilderness. They did everything from the bottom up—landowners, conservation groups, the whole nine yards. They came together and said Here is what we want. They had been working on it for five years, and it had not gone anywhere. So this bill started to move and they say We are going to do this new wilderness—50,000 acres, Wavoka. Here you go. But those folks up in Winnemucca had been doing the right thing for five years. I am not going back up to Winnemucca and saying Guess what, the newest wilderness area in the state is one that, quite frankly, started real fast and finished in front of you folks. So we added that in, but we came down to a final snag on an issue. There were some folks who said We do not want you to be able to put mechanized equipment in a wilderness area to fight wildland fires. Well, we have had it in bills before. Would you rather see it burn up? We do not want that. It was Harry Reid who said It is going. We put, under those circumstances, mechanized equipment in wilderness areas to try to fight the fires. So I want to say this because it is a controversial time in terms of public land bills in some minds. Let me just give you a federal report before we move on.

As we speak, 25 percent of the counties in Nevada have either requested, through their county commissions, public lands bills to be introduced or are starting to draft some. Those four counties represent, with their combined population through their county commissioners, about 90 percent of the population of the state. You can guess who two of the four are, and so I say this: As long as I am given the responsibility of representing this state—and by the way, that has changed a little bit after the election, as the only guy in the elephant pasture in the house—you are riding for the brand of the state, at least I think you should. When we talk about public lands bills, regardless of where they are in the state, and when looking at that history where over eight out of every ten acres in the state is federal, that is part of existence, we will continue to listen to people. I have gotten a lot of feedback on House Resolution 1484. The bill will change. I think, quite frankly, if somebody went to the Governor and said We are going to give you 10 million acres and you get to manage it, those of you who sit on the budget committees, as well as the Governor, would probably say Do not call me, I will call you. We have heard that. The issue here, right where I started with public lands, is local control—local control that gave local officials, elected officials in Clark County, some key power to decide how they wanted to grow. We are going to continue to look for ways to increase local control in the 115th Congress, and if it is not through ownership, then that is fine. There are other ways. When the bill comes out, you will see it. We will take more input. Remember, I am a process guy. We will see where that ends up. I am looking forward to continuing that discussion and moving along down that road.

That is probably enough. I see the light is starting to fade outside, so I want to get to the most important part of the evening and what will hopefully set the standard for other people. I was in Elko about three years ago. I notice that Judge Parraguirre is missing, so he cannot represent the sheepherder nation, but Pete Goicoechea was nice enough to stay so he can represent part of it, and I know there are other folks of Basque heritage in here. I was up in Elko going over the schedule for the next day, talking to my rural representative up there. I said I have this meeting with the coffee klatch in the morning. She said No, it is the P.I.C.O.N. club. I said, “Oh, okay, the drink; I get it.” I am not masculine enough to drink them without going into vapor lock but most of you are. I see Mr. Ellison over there smiling. I know he has never had one, but bear with me. She said, “No, P.I.C.O.N.—P.I.C.O.N., People in Charge of Nevada. That is what they call themselves.”

Now, most of you know I am not a very clever guy, but I thought that was very clever. Let’s do a logo and have chapters all over the state, in different cities and towns so everyone can have their own chapter of People in Charge of Nevada. It has been going on for a couple of years, and I must apologize. We have a D.C. chapter; we have Las Vegas, Mesquite, Ely, and Winnemucca chapters. Elko got to be chapter number one—sorry, they thought of it. So we have all these chapters. I thought about this being scheduled for tonight, and I thought, We do not have a state P.I.C.O.N chapter. I apologize for that. I am here tonight to remedy that situation. I have had state chapter P.I.C.O.N Club hats made for each member of the Assembly and the Senate so that you can all be People in Charge of Nevada. The Sergeant at Arms will distribute those to members. Knowing that there were other people here, I would also like to distribute, for the state chapter, the first hat to you, Governor Sandoval, with your name on the back. Secretary Cegavske, since you are in charge of paperwork and filing and stuff like that, your hat is in here. Would you please see that these are distributed to the Controller, the Attorney General, and the other officials whose names are on the back? I would very much appreciate it.

Even though I am an inactive member of the State Bar, forgetting the Supreme Court is never a good idea, active or inactive. Mr. Chief Justice, I have seven hats here for the members of the Supreme Court. Welcome to the state chapter of People in Charge of Nevada.

And with that, Mr. President pro Tem, Mr. Speaker, thank you for your kindness and indulgence. Those conclude my remarks, and good luck in the rest of your session.

Assemblyman Wheeler moved that the Senate and Assembly in Joint Session extend a vote of thanks to Representative Amodei for his timely, able, and constructive message.

Seconded by Senator Hardy.

Motion carried.

The Committee on Escort escorted Representative Amodei to the bar of the Assembly.
