AB369 / BDR 14-67 is an act relating to the judiciary; revising provisions relating to certain fines, administrative assessments and fees; revising provisions relating to community service performed in lieu of certain administrative assessments or fees; and providing other matters properly relating thereto.

Existing law establishes the circumstances in which a person who commits a minor traffic offense is presumed to be indigent and prohibits a court from taking certain actions against an indigent person. (NRS 176.0643, 176.075) Section 7 of this bill: (1) expands the circumstances in which a person is presumed to be indigent... Section 5 requires the court to: (1) waive any fee assessed against a defendant if the household income limit of the defendant is less than 400 percent of the very low income limit for a family of equal size to the defendant; and (2) waive or reduce any administrative assessment or fine imposed against the defendant based upon the household income limit of the defendant. Existing law provides that any delinquent fine, administrative assessment or fee owed by a defendant for the commission of a minor traffic offense is deemed to be uncollectible if after 10 years it remains impossible or impracticable to collect the delinquent amount. Section 8 of this bill: (1) reduces that period to 5 years; and (2) deems any delinquent fine, administrative assessment or fee owed by a defendant who commits an offense punishable as a misdemeanor uncollectible under the same circumstances.

If this bill as introduced is enacted, it may reduce the collection of administrative assessments. The Department of Public Safety, Records, Communications and Compliance Division currently receives a percentage of collected administrative assessments to fund the Division's operations. Reduced funding could necessitate the Division requesting supplemental contingency funding during the interim.
